TEXTURA VOLCANICA

2022 WORKS

The natural world makes its way into our homes in many ways and many guises, though in its new context, it is often tamed, smoothed, polished...

Textura Volcanica, the latest collection from the New York City-based design studio, Aguirre, retains the rough and unrefined nature of its namesake, the volcano. Matt-black in color and pock-marked all over, Aguirre interprets the distinctive texture of volcanic rock in cast bronze - a material with which the studio has a great affinity.

There is a certain poetry at the heart of the collection, a synchronicity between process and outcome - the volcanic forms and the cast bronze pieces that they inspired. Like lava, cast bronze is an impression of its environment - a record of the forces that shaped it - and much like the molten lava that hardens to form volcanic rock, when subjected to intense heat bronze also becomes liquified. In its liquid state, the superheated metal alloy creates an ultra high-fidelity impression or 'cast', complete with the most intricate details and subtleties.

Recalling not only the textures of volcanic rock, the collection also harnesses the power and scale of the volcano. Monolithic in shape and stature, the large expanses of uninterrupted surface invite the viewer to indulge in their raw beauty. The rich black patina of the cast bronze is paired with surfaces made in polished bronze and ebonized walnut, and upholstered with textiles that are pulled taut around their bone-shaped and pebble-like forms. Occasional cuts and incisions in the bronze reveal a glowing interior of highly-polished bronze, resembling the red-hot lava that simmers just beneath the surface...

Expertly crafted by hand, the collection is loosely reminiscent of Giacometti's masterpieces - also made in bronze: static objects whose quivering surfaces suggest movement, energy, life.

With Textura Volcanica, Aguirre takes its obsession with surface texture to even greater heights.
